Philosophy 243 / Feminist & Gender Studies 243

PHILOSOPHY AND POLITICS OF IDENTITY

231 Armstrong Hall

Course Description

Philosophy 243 will investigate the meanings, problems, and possibilities of contemporary understandings of identity, particularly as affected by development of movements of identity politics in recent decades. The course will begin with an examination of three very different approaches toward identity and politics: liberal conceptions of individual rights and religious liberties; existential explorations of nihilism and freedom; and traditionalist understandings of virtue and action. The heart of the course will then trace the emergence of a new kind of identity politics out of racial, feminist, queer, and evangelical movements of the late twentieth and early twenty-first centuries. The term will end by trying to make sense of contemporary discussions of identity and politics, in relation to both the history of Western thought and contemporary cultural and political life. Note that this course is also cross-listed as Feminist and Gender Studies 243. Students may enroll under either of these rubrics.

Course Goals

The primary aim of the course will be to help students understand some basic philosophical approaches to understanding identity – both in personal and political or social senses. The course will explore dilemmas and controversies associated with such approaches to identity. An equally important aim of the course will be help students gain perspective on contemporary political controversies associated with the emergence of various forms of identity politics, particularly forms associated with racial, feminist, and queer political movements of the last 40 years or so, as well as conservative reactions to those movements. Finally, the course will also seek to develop students' ability to make judgments on controversial issues, using philosophical principles and arguments in combination with social, cultural, and historical interpretations of the changing contexts that shape philosophical horizons.

Philosophy 243 course will seek to develop students' abilities to read, interpret, and respond to complex texts. Refining and developing interpretations of the texts we read will be emphasized through a number of short writing assignments, combined with discussion and presentations in class. Two longer papers will aim to give students opportunities to develop and defend their judgments about the problems the course will investigate. The second of those papers will enable students to explore in some depth one problem relevant to our topic and common literature.

Course Requirements

Reading. This course will have a heavy yet quite rewarding reading list. Students will be expected to keep up with the reading throughout the block. Plan to spend a fair amount of time reading before attending class and, at times, re-reading after class. In general, texts are to be brought to our meetings so that they may be referred to in our discussions.

Course Meetings and Discussion. Most course meetings will consist largely of discussion, with some lecturing from time to time. Individual students may be assigned to lead discussions or take part in debates on particular topics periodically. Students should expect to attend class meetings consistently and punctually, and discuss the subjects and texts under investigation in a civil manner. Performance in discussions will strongly influence the participation grade.

Writing and Examinations. Students will write five 1½-2 page reaction papers and two longer essays (4-5 and 6-8 pages, respectively). The short reaction papers may be presented in an informal style, and they will be graded minimally. The two longer essays are to be typed (i.e., word-processed), double-spaced, and annotated in accordance with the Chicago Manual of Style. Unexcused late papers will be downgraded one step per hour tardy. For detailed explanations of the grading policy, see the end of this syllabus.

Grading and Attendance Policies

Grades will be assigned on an 100-point scale and weighted in the following manner:

1. First paper draft and workshop	Mon. 29 April	2%
2. First paper (4-5 pages)	Wed., 1 May	25%
3. Second paper proposal and review	Tues., 7 May/W-Th. 8-9 May	1%
4. Second paper draft/writing workshop	Mon. 13 May	2%
5. Second paper (6-8 pages)	Wed., 15 May	40%
6. Five reaction papers (2 pages, each)	Various dates	10%
7. Participation	All block!	20%
TOTAL:		100%

The two-page reaction papers will be graded minimally: check, minus, zero. For detail on this requirement, see p. 6.

Regular, timely attendance and active participation in discussion are essential parts of the course – worth 20% of your final grade. Unexcused absences and regular tardiness will be noted and will affect grades negatively. Students who miss three or more classes for any reason may be required to withdraw from the course. If you have a good reason to be absent or late, notify me as soon as possible. Be sure to write a note (so that I remember!), as well as to speak to me.

The schedule of assignments appears above. You will be expected to meet all of these deadlines. Exceptions will be made only in extreme and unavoidable circumstances. If you expect to miss an assignment or submit one late, contact me immediately. Either see me in my office, or give me a note or an e-mail message explaining your circumstances. If religious observances or other serious obligations conflict with the course schedule, let me know as soon as possible, and we can work out an alternate schedule for you.

Plan to attend class for the whole period, focusing on coursework throughout. “Attending for the whole period” means, among other things, that you will not leave class to visit the restroom, get a drink of water, chat with friends, call Mom on the cell, and the like. We will take a break about after about an hour and 15 minutes – that is when you may leave class (except in an emergency, of course). If you have a good reason for arriving late or leaving early, please notify me in advance. As a courtesy to all, please silence all telephones and electronic devices while in class, and if you bring a notebook computer or tablet to class, please do not surf the web while we are in session and please do remember to make regular eye contact with us. Note that this entire syllabus is subject to change at the discretion of the instructor.

Honor Code

Students will be expected to abide by the Honor Code. Among other things, the Honor Code specifies that you will be responsible for producing all of your own work and that you will always cite the works or ideas of others used in your work. However, discussing your ideas and your writing with others is not a violation of the Honor Code. In fact, it is a good idea to compare your ideas and writings with those of others and to ask others for criticisms of your work. And using other people’s ideas can also be a good idea – if their ideas are good and you credit the authors for developing the ideas. The two formal papers should include a statement affirming that the Honor Code has been upheld.

Disability Accommodations

If you believe you are eligible for learning accommodations as the result of a qualified disability, please contact me privately. If you believe you may have a disability that impacts learning, and you have not identified yourself to the College’s Disabilities Services Office, please do so immediately. You will find their office in the Colket Student Learning Center at Tutt Library, Room 152. You may also contact the College’s Disability Services Coordinator, Jan Edwards, at jedwards@coloradocollege.edu or 719-227-8285. I will make appropriate learning accommodations in accordance with the Disabilities Service Office’s instructions.

Office Hours/Communication

I will hold office hours on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 1:30-3 p.m. I am also generally be in my office (124 Armstrong) in the afternoon. The easiest way to meet with me would be to make an appointment after class, or via telephone (x6564) or e-mail (dennismc@coloradocollege.edu).

SECOND PAPER DUE AT NOON

Two-Page Summary and Reaction Statements

Throughout the two blocks, students will write five short, informal summary-and-reaction statement. Students will be assigned to one of six groups, listed above in the schedule, and expected to write papers on the readings assigned to their group. Each student's piece should be divided into two parts:

- a) Summary: stating what strikes you as the most significant or interesting point (or two points) made in the assigned text (½–1 page); and
- b) Reaction: explaining what that aspect of the reading leads you to think about (1–1½ pages).

These statements should be the equivalent of 1½-2 word-processed, double-spaced pages – so about 375-525 words long. The format is informal: your statement should list your name, the date, the assignment (the authors, titles, and chapters/pages discussed), and your own title at the top. You should divide the statement into two parts ("Summary" and "Reaction"), one summarizing the reading's most important point or points and the other giving your reaction to the reading. You need neither quote nor cite the text, though you can, if you think it important to do so. The statements should be written in clear, Standard English prose. The style may be informal.

As you write, don't try to summarize all the points made in the reading. Focus on one or two points that seem highly significant to you. This point or these points ought to have led you to think about something that seems important, significant, or meaningful. This point or these points need not be central to the reading, although in most cases I expect they will be. You may well write about some minor aside that an author makes, if that aside has led you to begin thinking. Just be sure to explain clearly and accurately what the author says when you claim the authors argue something. Also, explain your reaction, your interest, your thought process. When I say, "explain," I don't mean saying that something is "interesting" or it has "made you think." Instead, identify what in particular strikes you as interesting, or what specific problems or ideas the reading raised for you, and then give the reader some sense of why any of these ideas seem important or significant to you. What has led you to react in the way you have?

This assignment is meant to focus both on the reading and on your thoughts insofar as they relate to the reading. For the second portion of the paper, you may explain why the authors' claims seem to you wrong-headed, or really cogent; why they excite or repel you; why they have made you think of something in a new way, or why they seem to point to a dead end. You may explain why the piece seems really bad or really good to you. This assignment lets you think aloud, as it were. However, the first part of the paper should accurately summarize what the author says.

The assignment also, I hope, will further two other aims. First, it will give you a chance to work on mastering the reading, as well as to demonstrate to me that you have done the reading. If there are parts of the reading that you don't understand, then write about the problems you have in seeing the author's points. I'll try to address those problems, either directly, by commenting on your paper, or indirectly, in class.

Second, your comments may provide materials for our class discussion, as well as prepare you for writing the longer papers and exams.

These papers will be graded minimally: check, check/minus, minus, zero. I may add no or only a few comments.

- Check: a) the paper clearly and coherently develops an idea; b) it also accurately and fully summarizes what the reading says; and c) it convincingly and clearly shows why this point or line of thought is significant to you.
- Check/minus: the paper demonstrates some effort, but it is incomplete or unbalanced.
- Minus: the paper is just thrown together, it lacks careful thought, or it is wildly inaccurate about the reading,

Checks will earn full credit (1%), check/minuses partial credit (0.75%) and minuses (0.5%) minimal credit. A check is the equivalent of an “A+” already for 1% of your final grade.

No late papers will be accepted. Finally, all papers will be posted to the course PROWL site by 7:30 a.m. will be and available to the entire class, for use in our discussions and preparing papers.

Note: Students will be assigned to one of six groups, corresponding to numbers listed on reading schedule. These groups and readings are summarized below:

READING FURTHER

Inquiry into the meaning and lived experience of identity cuts across many fields, including sociology and anthropology (often focusing on the construction of collectivities in particular times and places); psychology (typically examining the development of “the self”); and political science (analyzing the success or failure of national or subcultural group formations). In philosophy, investigations of identity tend to fall into three main categories: accounts of personal identity; inquiry into the logic of identity; and examination of social or political identity.

Below, I have collected—in a very unsystematic way—references to works in each of these areas that Tutt Library owns. I have also included a few important works that Tutt does not yet own. Articles and books appearing in the syllabus are not listed below.

In some cases, the works below are extremely important; others appear here just because our library carries them and a brief look at the book or article led me to think that it might be worth some study. I’ve added a comment or two to some entries. Bear in mind, however, that this bibliography is a work-in-progress. Some important works are neglected, and some of the works here are probably not that significant. I offer this list, partly, to give students a sense of what else might be available on the broad topic of identity; and, partly, to give a way into materials that may be useful in developing a second paper topic.
